

Dr. Moreno Named Aspen Fellow

The Aspen Institute (Aspen) announced that Dr. Marissa Moreno, vice president of transfer, placement, and workforce development at Lee College, is one of 40 outstanding leaders from across the country for the 2026-27 Aspen Rising Presidents Fellowship. Chosen from a competitive pool of more than 125 applicants, these 40 executive and senior community college leaders were chosen for their potential to enact major reforms that deliver much stronger results for students.

Over 15 years, Aspen's research on high-performing community colleges has consistently shown that high and improving levels of student success are much more likely when an exceptional president is leading the community college. For that reason, Aspen has been working for a decade to help prepare a new generation of transformational community college leaders through this program.

Over the coming year, these fellows will:

- Deeply examine data on available jobs in their community and student outcomes at their colleges
- Learn about transformational models from 15 years of Aspen Prize research into colleges with high and improving levels of student success through the Aspen Prize process
- Receive coaching and feedback from accomplished college leaders, including sitting and retired presidents who have led transformational reforms
- Devise a concept for major reform strategy at their institution, receiving critical feedback from peers and experts along the way

"Our research shows that excellent colleges share a common trait: they are led by presidents who focus on a few transformative initiatives that extend beyond enrollment and even completion numbers, centering instead on whether graduates are prepared for transfer and bachelor's attainment and success in the workforce or further education," said Josh Wyner, executive director of the Aspen Institute College Excellence Program. "I cannot wait to begin working with this impressive set of leaders."

"Dr. Marissa Moreno's selection for the Aspen Institute's Rising Presidents Fellowship is a tremendous honor for both her and our institution," said Jacob Atkin, interim president of Lee College. "For 25 years, Dr. Moreno has helped advance the college's mission through her dedication to students, workforce development, and academic excellence. This recognition highlights both her talent and the meaningful impact she continues to make on Lee College and our community."

"Having known Dr. Moreno for many years, I have had the privilege of watching her grow into an exceptional leader who truly cares about students, faculty, staff, and this community," said Gilbert Santana, chairman of the Lee College Board of Regents. "Her selection for the Aspen Institute's Rising Presidents Fellowship is incredibly well deserved and speaks to the dedication, integrity, and vision she brings to her role at Lee College every day. We are proud to see her recognized on a national level and look forward to all she will continue to accomplish."

Rising Presidents Fellows are chosen based on their commitment to improving student success and advancing economic mobility, their readiness to lead major student-success reforms, and the likelihood that they will assume a college presidency within five years of completing the program. The selected fellows come from 20 states and a wide range of institutions — from small rural colleges to large urban campuses — bringing diverse perspectives and experiences to the fellowship. They join a vibrant network of over 500 peers — including over 215 sitting presidents — who are leading colleges that help more students finish college, transfer to four-year institutions, and secure good jobs.

“I am deeply honored to be selected for the Aspen Institute’s Rising President’s Fellowship,” said Moreno. “Over the past 25 years at Lee College, this institution has shaped not only my professional journey, but also my commitment to serving students and our community. It is especially meaningful to complete this prestigious program while continuing to serve the college that I consider my home. I look forward to bringing back new ideas, perspectives, and strategies that will further strengthen opportunities for our students and positively impact the entire community.”

The Aspen Rising Presidents Fellowship is made possible through the generous support of the Burton Family Foundation, Charles and Lynn Schusterman Family Philanthropies, College Futures Foundation, Mellon Foundation, and the Belk Center for Community College Leadership and Research at NC State University.
